

Cris Woloszak was born in Manhattan. He and his family moved to south Florida when Cris was young. The beach had an early influence on him and he began surfing. While waiting for the perfect wave, Cris would admire the sea life beneath his board. He spent most of his youth at the beach, but at age fourteen, his family moved back to New York. His father introduced him to custom painted cars where he was blown away by the designs and colors. Hot rods became Cris's new hobby. After high school, Cris moved back to Florida for college, and learned the art of custom flame jobs. He was soon painting flames on the cars and motorcycles of his friends. He later merged the passion of his youth and the passion of adulthood by applying custom paint jobs to taxidermy marine life. His hand-airbrushed sharks have approximately forty coats of automobile paint and real shark's teeth.
