

Dave Wight also known as “Big Wave Dave” studied at Pilchuck Glass School and spent ten years working with glass and water. After creating fine art glass fountains, Dave thought why not make the water out of glass. Water is our life force, and he represents it in its most dynamic form, the wave. Through his unique process he allows the glass to have a life of its own. His waves express movement and energy in a way uncommon to traditional glass working. He has combined his love for the ocean with this love for glass sculpting. Dave lives in his hometown of Bellingham, Washington. He is surrounded by the Cascade Mountains and the San Juan Islands, which offer him inspiration for his art. Dave is also inspired by the Hawaiian Islands as he spends a few months a year there.
